ASOSU Human Services Resource Coordinator

Oregon State University has always been a place with a purpose – making a positive difference on quality of life and the natural world in Oregon and beyond. Through teaching, applied research, innovation and service, OSU turns ideals into reality with a unique approach characterized by collaboration and strategic focus.

The Associated Students of Oregon State University (The ASOSU) are hiring for the Human Services Resource Coordinator position. The Human Services Resource Center (HSRC) is a student-initiated, student-sustained program that provides programs, education, and referral services to students on Oregon State University campus affected by hunger or poverty.

ASOSU Human Services Resource Coordinator manages and supervises the day-to-day operations of the HSRC. This includes coordinating food and housing services for students and budget management. The Coordinator collaborates with several organizations and is responsible for outreach, education, advocacy, administrative oversight, and supervision of student employees. This position provides referrals to internal and external resources, augments OSU's retention efforts, and supports the whole-life success of OSU students.

To succeed, you'll need a bachelor's degree and experience in higher education, human or social services, community development or a related field, knowledge of social and cultural systems influencing poverty, and excellent written and oral communication skills.
