

Partner Violence, Reproductive Coercion, and Unintended Pregnancy

DATE: Tuesday, March 22, 2011

REGISTRATION: 8:30 AM

WORKSHOP: 9:00 AM – 4:00 PM (1-hour lunch on your own)

RH2011
REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH CONFERENCE
40TH ANNUAL CONTINUING EDUCATION CONFERENCE
MARCH 23-25, 2011 • THE NINES • PORTLAND, OR

ABOUT THIS WORKSHOP

This course will explore the link between intimate partner violence and women's reproductive health. Intimate partner violence (IPV), birth control sabotage and other forms of reproductive coercion present unique challenges for intervention as well as prevention. Strategies from a community-based family planning clinic intervention to reduce partner violence will be presented.

LEARNING OBJECTIVES

Upon completing this workshop participants will be able to:

1. Describe assessment and intervention for reproductive coercion and intimate partner violence in clinical and community-based settings.
2. Describe ways to integrate education about partner violence into clinical and prevention practice.
3. Review new tools for conducting quality improvement related to partner violence and reproductive coercion within reproductive health programs.
4. Identify concrete approaches to create a collaborative community-based model of care to address partner violence prevention and intervention.
5. Describe the unique characteristics of adolescent relationship abuse including developmental differences, digital abuse, and the challenges of balancing minor consent, confidentiality, safety, and mandated reporting requirements.

WHO SHOULD ATTEND

This course is designed for licensed clinical providers such as nurse practitioners and other midlevel clinicians, RNs and public health nurses, as well as community educators, clinical and program managers, youth development workers, and others who work with adolescents in family planning or other community service settings.
