Project description:

Washington County Cooperative Library Services is issuing five contracts for the Fostering Grade Level Reading project team.

- Bilingual Children's Librarian
- Bilingual Reading Specialist
- Children's Librarian
- Reading Specialist
- Evaluator

Fostering Grade Level Reading is a grant-funded project to provide public library staff with the resources they need to plan, implement, and evaluate evidence-based literacy programs for K-3rd grade children who are learning how to read. During the 2015-2016 school year, 23% of students in Oregon's K-12 schools were Latino and that number is growing every year. Therefore, the resources will be linguistically and culturally responsive to Latinos and children who speak Spanish as their primary language.

Fostering Grade Level Reading will be implemented by a project team consisting of two children's librarians, two reading specialists, an evaluator, two OregonASK out-of-school time specialists, and two project managers from Washington County Cooperative Library Services. One of the children's librarians and one of the reading specialists will be bilingual (English and Spanish). The bilingual reading specialist will also have at least one year experience as a teacher of English for Speakers of Other Languages working with Spanish-speaking children.

The children's librarians and reading specialists will conduct a research/literature review on the reading process, English language learners, best practices in library and afterschool programs, evidence-based literacy activities, culturally responsive literacy activities, and how adult family members can support children who are learning how to read. Based on the results of the research/literature review, the children's librarians and reading specialists will develop resources for public library staff to plan, implement, and evaluate out-of-school time literacy-based programs for K-3rd grade students. The evaluator will work with the children's librarians and reading specialists to develop an outcome-based evaluation for the resource. The entire project team will decide together what these resources will include. However, here is an example of what the resources for library staff may include:

- Learn about the reading process:
 - Terminology defined
 - Research highlights
- Plan literacy activities for K-3rd grade children
 - Best practices
 - Lesson plans for fun, evidence-based literacy activities that are culturally relevant (E.g. science experiment, food preparation, learn a hobby, puppet theater, family stories, etc)
 - Ideas for additional fun, evidence-based literacy activities
 - A lesson plan template that guides library staff to write evidenced-base plans for the additional ideas included in the resources and their own ideas
 - The activities will align with Common Core Standards, but will not include explicit instruction because librarians are not licensed teachers
- Evaluate the impact on children participating in the literacy activities
 - Outcome-based evaluation overview and guidance
 - Survey for participating children
 - Survey for parents of participating children
 - Report template and ideas for sharing your results
- Talk with K-3rd grade children and their families:
 - Talking points to answer questions children and families have about beginning reader books and the reading process
 - Open-ended questions to ask children about reading that improve comprehension and promote reading enjoyment
 - Reproducible informational handouts for adult family members

- Select books for K-3rd grade children:
 - Criteria for selecting high-quality reading materials
 - Information about reading levels and readability measures, including the importance of interest level
 - Pathfinders to recommended reading materials that are regularly updated (E.g. book lists)

- Outreach:
 - Information about partnering with elementary schools and other community organizations
 - Marketing materials

Fostering Grade Level Reading is a one-year project funded by the Institute of Museum and Library Services through the Library Services and Technology Act administered by the State Library of Oregon. If successful, the co-project managers may apply for another grant to fund a pilot project.

Desired outcomes and outputs for libraries using Fostering Readers resources:

Library staff will use Fostering Grade Level Reading resources to implement research-based literacy programs for K-3rd grade children that support local efforts to increase the number of students in third grade reading at grade level by 3rd grade.

- Library staff are more knowledgeable about the reading process
- Library staff are more confident in their ability to support children learning to read
- Library staff use Fostering Grade Level Reading materials to provide research-based literacy programs for K-3rd grade children
- *An evaluator will be contracted with to determine desired outcomes for K-3rd grade children that library staff can measure appropriately and effectively

The measureable outputs for this project will be:

- Libraries offer more literacy programs for K-3rd grade children
- Attendance at literacy programs for K-3rd grade children increases
- Circulation of reading materials for K-3rd grade children increases

Deliverables:

The Reading Specialist will work with a Bilingual Children's Librarian, Children's Librarian, Bilingual Reading Specialist, and an evaluator and under the guidance from the project managers and OregonASK staff to deliver:

- A research/literature review of the reading process, English language learners, culturally responsive literacy activities, evidence-based literacy activities, and how adult family members can support K-3rd grade students are learning to read.

*NOTE: Under certain circumstances, partnerships and limited liability companies can claim an exemption even when performing construction work. The requirements for this exemption are complicated. Consult with County Counsel before an exemption request is accepted from a contractor who will perform construction work.

WORKERS’ COMPENSATION INFORMATION AND FORMS

Oregon law (ORS 656.023) states that every employer employing one or more “subject workers” is required to adhere to the workers’ compensation statutes. “Subject workers” are all employees except certain domestic workers, certain kinds of casual workers (people earning less than $200 in a 30-day period), and certain groups of employees covered by federal compensation programs (for example, Longshore and Harborworkers). Also excluded from the definition of subject workers are sole proprietors who qualify as independent contractors, partners who are not engaged in construction-related work and who qualify as independent contractors, and certain kinds of corporate officers who are directors of the corporation and have a substantial ownership interest in the corporation. Other workers excluded from the definition of subject workers are people performing services for room and board or other nominal compensation for religious, charitable, or relief organizations, foster parents, certain sports-related workers, and volunteers participating in certain ACTION programs for seniors. Generally, most organizations with which the County contracts for services either by contract or purchase order will be required to provide proof of workers’ compensation insurance coverage. The only exceptions to this requirement are likely to be found in contracts with individuals or partners who are independent contractors.

It is critical to obtain proof of workers’ compensation insurance prior to allowing work to begin under the contract. By Oregon law (ORS 656.029), the person (in our case, the County) awarding the contract is responsible for providing workers’ compensation insurance “unless the person to whom the contract is awarded provides such coverage for those individuals before labor under the contract commences.” What this means is that if a worker employed by an agency with which the County contracts is injured and the contractor has failed to obtain workers' compensation coverage, the County would become the workers' compensation coverage provider for that workers' injury. The County, because it is self-insured, would pay for the workers' medical costs, any time lost from work, and compensation for any permanent disability. Depending on the severity of the injury, this could be quite costly.

The only way to protect the County from these kinds of losses is to require proof of workers' compensation coverage prior to executing and/or allowing work to begin under the contract. The proof of insurance must cover the start date of the contract. If the insurance coverage will expire during the term of the contract, the contract should specify that the contractor or its insurer will notify the County at least 30 days prior to the expiration of the coverage.

If your contractor is from out-of-state, you do not need to require them to purchase Oregon workers' compensation coverage. You must, however, require the contractor to show proof of workers' compensation coverage in his/her home state that includes extraterritorial coverage. The contractor's workers' compensation extraterritorial coverage must pay benefits due under Oregon law if those benefits are greater than those provided for in the home state.

Sometimes, the organization with which the County is contracting will be self-insured. That is, it will have received approval from the State to be its own workers' compensation insurer, rather than being required to purchase insurance. These self-insured employers are generally governments and other large employers that can provide guarantees of their ability to fund their workers' compensation obligations under the law. In these instances, the organization should be able to provide documentation of its self-insured status, either by providing a letter from a person authorized to make such representations (for example, the chief financial officer or risk manager) or by providing a copy of its State Certification of Compliance.

In some instances, contractors will maintain that they are exempt from the requirement to provide workers' compensation insurance. In order for this to be true, the contractors must be (1) sole proprietorships, (2) partnerships, or (3) corporate officers who are directors of the corporation and have a substantial ownership interest in the corporation (subject to certain limitations). Certain limited liability companies and non-profit corporations may also qualify for exemption. When labor or services are performed under the contract or purchase order, the contractor must qualify as an independent contractor.

Independent contractors are defined by Oregon law (ORS 670.600). Generally, an independent contractor is an individual or business entity that provides labor or services under its own direction and control, obtains its own business/professional licenses and registrations, furnishes its own tools or equipment, hires and fires its own employees, and is paid upon completion of a project or by retainer. In addition, an independent contractor must operate as a business: registering with the State if appropriate, filing business tax returns, and presenting itself to the public as an independently established business.

If a contractor states that (s)he is exempt from State requirements to provide workers' compensation coverage, the contractor must sign the "Certification Statement for Corporation or Independent Contractor" and "Workers' Compensation Exemption Certification" forms.

If a contractor is exempt from workers' compensation requirements, (s)he must provide the signed statement of exemption and certification statement to the County prior to any work being done on the contract. These forms, when signed prior to the commencement of the contract, protect the County from having to pay for any workers' compensation claims that might be brought by employees hired by the contractor.

It is not clear whether the County would be protected from a workers' compensation claim if the County had knowledge that the contractor was not exempt, even though the statement of exemption had been signed. Therefore, in the event a County employee learns that a contractor who has signed the exemption certificate has one or more employees working under the contract, (s)he should contact Risk Management for assistance.
